Aéroports de Paris unveils its very first MANGO store in a French airport, at Paris-Orly Airport

Aéroports de Paris has opened its very first MANGO store in the West terminal of Paris-Orly Airport. This new store will display the MANGO womenswear collection across a surface area of almost 300sqm and will be open from the first flight of the morning to the last one of the night.

Augustin de Romanet, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Aéroports de Paris stated: "The opening of the first Mango store at Paris-Orly demonstrates Aéroports de Paris' commitment to providing a wider range of shops in the Parisian airports. When I became Chairman and CEO of Aéroports de Paris in November 2012, I supported the idea of providing our passengers, especially Europeans, with high quality yet more accessible retail outlets. This initial development will lead to further additions."

MANGO is continuing to develop and position itself on the international travel retail market with the opening of shops in airports such as London, New Delhi, Zurich, San Francisco, Beijing, Orlando, Nanchang, Palma de Mallorca, Barcelona and Paris. This new store in Paris is the 17th Mango store addition to the world's busiest airports.

This retail outlet is operated by Société de Distribution Aéroportuaire, a joint company between Aéroports de Paris and Lagardère Travel Retail. By the end of 2014, Société de Distribution Aéroportuaire was managing 129 shops over a total surface area of 22,300sqm across all the Paris-Charles de Gaulle and Paris-Orly terminals. In 2014, Société de Distribution Aéroportuaire's turnover reached €699m (+3.9% on 2013).
